SIMPLIFIED SPELLING. Work of Retorm Goes Steadily Onward.

Of course some of the newer paper notices are adverse, but so many of them are favorable, or at least abstain from the attempt when it was raining as if another deluge had come, "and that dude in the corner took it and has stuck to it ever since."

The standing room in the car was through the car was and replies to the accompanying circular adverse criticism, that it is evident the reform is passing safely by the stage when the chief wespon against it is ridicule.

The fact is so many of the best schollars of this country and of England are

The fact is so many of the best schollars of this country and of England are committed to the reform that ridicule has but a slim foothoid, and is no credit to the conservative to try to laugh down the reformers. The reform is now at the stage where it compels the respectful attention of thinking men, and it is becoming more a question of how scon the simplified spelling will come into general use rather than an issue of whether it will be adopted at all.

Some things have been learned by the reformers in their work of the last ten years, and one is that it will not do to attempt a thorough change at once. Conservatism, prejudice, and habit are too strong to yield at once to the shortened in well the summary of the summary of the last the new letters which must be added to the alphabet in order to make the system even tolerably near perfection. So the plan pursued now is to go slowly and to break up popular prejudice by degrees, The American Philogical Association contents itself with recommending the adoption of a list of ten words, and the spelling Reform Association gives five rules to be followed by beginners. There is a personal pledge sent out containing the ten words, the five rules, and other words, the five rules to be followed by beginners. There is a personal pledge sent out containing the ten words, the five rules, and other matter, as follows, which is signed and sent to Melvil Dewey, Secretary of the Spelling Reform Association, at Columbia College, New York:

I hereby giv my name to be used in the list of advocates of epelling reform, and agree to adopt for general use the simplified spellings indicated by the number signific—I wil—formation on request.

Many persons have become interested in the reform in this and similar ways. It is related of a Chicago business man that he became convinced of the merits of the simplified spelling sufficiently to send for documents, and after reading them he gave instructions to all who were in his employment that any words spelled according to the simpler form would be recognized as correct in all his letters. It has been found necessary to introduce the thin end of the wedge in this way, and it is not expected that any great change will be seen for perhaps a generation. It is necessary to convice people that no sacredness inheres in the present forms of English words, but rather that the spelling is irregular, often in defiance of rules, and at best the cause of years of wasted time in the education of children and a hindrance in the spread of Christianity and of English civilisation. These facts are indisputable to any one who looks into the proofs, and it is a marvel to think that we have tolerated no long as we have these ridiculous forms. If there is anywhere a legitimate field for ridicule it is in exposing the weakness of the current English spelling. So there is a vitality in the reform that appeals to men's reason and to their intolerance of what never ought to be borne. Hence the reform is sure to go forward till it is everywhere reand to their intolerance of what never ought to be borne. Honce the reform is sure to go forward till it is everywhere recognized and our present combination of ident letters and exceptions to simple rules are consigned to the past with "honour," "publick," and like forms which we are through with.

A few mayaranger of prominence have

A few newspapers of prominence have been Iriendly to the reform for years. Among these are mentioned the Chicago Tribune, the Utica Herald, the New York Ecening Post, and the Springfield Republican. Only a few words have been used in the shorter form, but the tendency of such use is to make the public familiar with them. People are not shocked now when they see "program" instead of "programme." The Springfield Republican and the Chicago Tribune have for years used "catalog" and "harang." But these beginnings are no more reasonable than the forms contained in the pledge system. Mas. Winslow's Soothing Spothing Spothin A few newspapers of prominence have been friendly to the reform for years. with them. People are not shocked now when they see "program" instead of "programme." The Springfield Republican and the Ohicago Tribune have for years used "catalog" and "harang." But these beginnings are no more reasonable than the forms contained in the pledge given above, and when the practical consideration is added that our present outrageous spelling causes a waste of two or three years in the education of every child in the public schools and an anor three years in the education of every child in the public schools and an annual equandering of $100,000,000 in printing and writing silent letters which are of very slight advantage after they have been thus extravagantly eaved; it seems as if the progress of the reform wends be speedy. Once give the new forms a sure standing in a few leading newspapers and they would be adopted by many smaller papers. Local school authorities would sanction their use, and the popular consauction their use, and the popular con-servatism would slowly yield. But the servatism would slowly yield. But the persistent nature of the opposition may be estimated from the elinging habit to this day of reckoning money in shillings and pence, and the preference of a few people for the Eeglish spelling "our" in "honour" and similar words. It is the hope of the reformers that the newspapers will carry still further the work they have begun and that the popular common senses will adopt their spelling.

Another move in contemplation is to persuade college authorities to recognize the simplified spelling after a certain date, by common agreement. In Yale, Harvard, and leading institutions of the West and South are well-known educators who are either active sharers in this work or who ewmenthize with it. It should be not a difficult matter to procure through their inflance at least a scheming of the

not a difficult matter to procure through their influence at least a toleration of the simpler spelling, even if it is not prefer-red. The fact that no one of the workers in this reform can make anything out of it personally, and that all they do is for the public good, ought to commend them it personally, and that all they do is for the public good, ought to commend them to the people.

A practical step for the new spelling will soon be taken in the publication by Henry Holt of New York, of a volume containing the forms which are opproved by the Spelling Reform Association. Prof. F. A. March, of Lafsyette College, President of the Association, has revised the work, in company with others, and it will be of material help. The new magazine will sho spread information, will familiarise the reader with the shorter forms of words, and will supply arguments and illustrations against the present system. The one point of insistence with educated people who resist any change is the value of the present forms to stymology. The magazine proposes to meet the objectors on their own ground and to show that the simpler forms are not as destructive of estymological valuess is asserted. This magazine will be kept alive, it is expected, until the reform is adopted, for its friends are full of determination to win, and money is already subscribed to meet the expected defict in the treasury. As the public come up to the use of the forms suggested the magazine will advance further toward consistency in the application of the rules. Eventually, it is seen, new consonants and vowels must be introduced, but for the years in the immediate future the effort will be to persuade people to a more rational use of
